1 INTRODUCTION

3 1. On 30th May 2018, following a trial in the Summary Court before Magistrate
4 Kirsty-Ann Gunn, Oscar Lee Watler and Stephen Wayne Hurlston (the Appellants)
5 were convicted of a number of offences, as follows:

6 a. Steven Hurlston:

- 7 i. Possession with intent to supply 1.6 lbs of cocaine (jointly with Mr
8 Watler);
9 ii. Possession with intent to supply 6.01 grams of cocaine;
10 iii. Possession of items used in the preparation or consumption of a 11 controlled drug (half a razor blade, 3 small self-locking bags and a 12 small plastic bag) (jointly with Mr Watler).

13 b. Oscar Lee Watler:

- 14 i. Possession with intent to supply 1.6 lbs of cocaine (jointly with Mr 15 Hurlston);
16 ii. Possession of items used in the preparation or consumption of a
17 controlled drug (half a razor blade, 3 small self-locking bags and a 18 small plastic bag) (jointly with Mr Hurlston);
19 iii. Possession with intent to supply 1.8 grams of cocaine;

- 20 • Mr. Watler had entered a limited plea of guilty to 21 simple possession of cocaine which was not
22 acceptable to the prosecution. The learned Magistrate
23 found the offence proved as charged.

- 24 iv. Possession of items used in the preparation or consumption of a 25 controlled drug (a plastic wrapper, 10 small self-locking plastic bags 26 and a digital weighing scale;

- Mr. Watler had entered a limited plea of guilty to possession of digital scales only which was not acceptable to the prosecution. The learned Magistrate found the offence proved as charged.

v. Consumption of ganja;

- Prior to trial Mr. Watler pleaded guilty to this charge.

- vi. Consumption of cocaine;

- Prior to trial Mr. Watler pleaded guilty to this charge.

2. On 22nd August 2018, the Magistrate sentenced both defendants to a term of 12 ½ years' imprisonment upon the charge of possession with intent to supply 1.6 lbs of cocaine, passing concurrent terms in respect of all other offences.

3. Both Appellants now appeal against both their convictions and sentence.

THE EVIDENCE AT TRIAL

4. The prosecution case at trial relied, for the most-part, upon the evidence of one police officer, Police Constable #117 Ishmale<sup>1</sup> Leslie (PC Leslie) of the Royal Cayman Islands Police Service (RCIPS). He gave evidence that on 3rd October 2015. He was on patrol alone in the Patrick's Island area. As he drove along Reverie Road, he noticed a car parked in the bushes in an open lot and two men (the Appellants) standing at the rear of the car. PC Leslie stopped and walked over to the Appellants who moved to the front of the car. PC Leslie said that he saw Mr Hurlston throw something towards the passenger door. PC Leslie later retrieved that item – a plastic bag containing a white powder which subsequent analysis

1 revealed to be 6.01 grams cocaine<sup>2</sup>. According to PC Leslie, both Appellants
2 appeared nervous.

4 5. The officer moved to the rear of the car and saw a set of keys and a half razor blade
5 (on which traces of cocaine were later found) on the trunk. On the ground near Mr 6 Watler, the officer noticed 3 small plastic bags – one of which was found to 7 contain a small amount of cocaine. As he reached down to pick up these bags, PC
8 Leslie saw a yellow package, partially under the car. Inside the package were what 9 he described as two rocks – subsequent analysis found this to be 1.6 lbs of cocaine
10 hydrochloride. PC Leslie told both Appellants they were being arrested for 11 possession of illegal drugs and utensils.

13 6. According to PC Leslie, as he was administering the caution but before he was able 14 to compete it, Mr Watler said: “Officer, I can’t lose my job right now. I can’t go to 15 jail now. Do something for me.” Mr Hurlston, said something similar, adding that 16 he had worked for the Immigration Department for 7 years and had a step-daughter 17 to support. Mr Hurlston is said to have concluded by saying, “I found it on the 18 beach. I should have dash it away, yo.” Mr Watler added, “I know you can make 19 this go behind us. I don’t even want to see you again. I feel like pinching myself to 20 see if I am awake.”

21

22 7. In cross examination, PC Leslie told the court that, in reply, he said this: “If this
23 were ganja, it would be easier for me to give you a break, but this is cocaine. It 24 destroys lives.” When he was able, the officer said he completed the words of the 25 caution.

1        8.        When PC Leslie asked Mr Watler to empty his pockets, he removed, amongst other 2                    things, a small number of self-locking bags containing cocaine and a small digital
3                    scale. PC Leslie requested assistance, which eventually arrived. The Appellants
4                    were taken to the police station.

6        9.        Searches of the Appellants' homes were later carried out and nothing of any 7                    evidential significance was recovered.

9        10.       The various items seized at the scene were sent for analysis. No DNA or other
10                   scientific evidence established a link between these items and either Appellant.

11
12       11.       Both Appellants were interviewed at the police station. Mr Hurlston made no
13                   comment to all questions asked of him. Mr Watler adopted a broadly similar 14                   stance although expressly denied that he produced any bags or scales from his 15                   pockets, contending that the officer had found these on the ground.

17       12.       Submissions were made on behalf of both Appellants at the close of the 18                   prosecution case that there was no case to answer. The Magistrate rejected those 19                   submissions. It is said by Mr Hill QC, who now appears for both Appellants,
20                   although did not appear at first instance, that the Magistrate gave no reasons for her 21                   decision immediately following those submissions, although she did give full 22                   details explaining her "no case" reasoning in the course of her verdict judgment
23                   (paragraphs 20 to 48), delivered after all the evidence had been heard. The 24                   transcript obtained records the evidence given before the Summary Court but does 25                   not assist as to whether any reasons were given at the time for rejecting the "no
26                   case" submissions. The "no case submissions" are not recorded at all. Mr 27                   Wainwright, now appearing for the Respondent, did not appear below and thus 28                   could not assist.

1       13.    The Appellants, both of good character and long-term employees of the 2           Immigration Department, gave evidence to the Magistrate.

4       14.    In summary, Mr Hurlston said that he had, earlier that day, accepted Mr Watler's
5           invitation to go lobster fishing. They drove to the lot where they were later
6           arrested. Garbage was strewn around the lot, including, he noticed, little plastic
7           bags. PC Leslie arrived there only minutes after the Appellants. He said the officer
8           recovered a razor blade from the ground rather than the trunk. He denied having 9           thrown anything to the ground. He accepted that the officer had retrieved the 10          package from underneath the car, but said that he was unaware of its presence until 11          the officer did so. Mr Watler did produce some little packages and a digital scale
12          from his pocket, of which Mr Hurlston had not, until that moment, been aware. Mr 13          Hurlston recalled the officer saying, when arresting him, that "had it been weed or 14          even a pound of weed he could chance it and let them go." He denied making any 15          request of or suggestion to the officer that he turn a blind eye, saying that he did 16          not speak to PC Leslie at all at the lot. He remained silent at interview on the 17          advice of his attorney.

19       15.    Mr Watler also told the court that they had driven to the lot, which backs on to a 20          canal, to fish for lobster. He noticed items on the ground – particularly some bags, 21          one of which contained a white substance. He picked them up to see what they 22          were, and also the digital scale which he found under some twigs. It was then that 23          PC Leslie approached. Mr. Watler said he was nervous and so put the items in his 24          pocket. Like Mr Hurlston, he was not aware of the package under the car until it 25          was retrieved by the officer.

26

1       16.     Mr. Watler said he may have mentioned that he worked for the Immigration
2             Department and may have asked PC Leslie to turn a blind eye. He did recall the 3             officer saying that if it had been ganja, he would have let him go. He made no
4             comment to most questions during the course of his interview, following legal 5             advice, although denied then that he produced anything from his pocket to PC
6             Leslie because the items did not “originate” from him.

8       THE APPEALS AGAINST CONVICTIONS - GROUNDS OF APPEAL AGAINST CONVICTION

10       17.     The grounds of appeal against conviction relied upon by both Appellants are 11             broadly similar.

13       18.     Complaint is made firstly about the Magistrate’s approach to PC Leslie’s evidence 14             as to what passed between him and the Appellants, beginning as he administered or 15             attempted to administer the caution. Mr Hill contends that the Magistrate should 16             have, but did not, hold a voir dire to determine the admissibility of PC Leslie’s
17             evidence of what was said by the Appellants, particularly the request to turn a blind
18             eye. A voir dire, Mr Hill argues, should have been held to determine whether or 19             not the statements alleged to have been made by the Appellants were admissible
20             notwithstanding (a) the fact that they denied making the statements, (b) that a 21             caution was not properly administered as required by the Judges Rules<sup>3</sup> and (c) that 22             PC Leslie’s indication that he might have been able to take a different course had it
23             been ganja rather than cocaine could have amounted to an inducement, thereby 24             imposing a duty on the prosecution to prove that the defendants’ entreaties (and

1 particularly the admissions implied therein) had not been induced as a consequence
2 of any threat or promise held out by a person in authority.

4 19. Next, it is said that the Magistrate erred in her approach to the submissions made at 5 the close of the prosecution's case. Firstly, it is said the Magistrate should have 6 given her reasons for finding that there was a case to answer when announcing that 7 decision, rather than incorporating them in her verdict judgement.

9 20. Secondly, it is argued that in reaching her decision, she made "findings of fact 10 prematurely before all the evidence was completed." Reliance is particularly 11 placed on the decision of the Cayman Islands Court of Appeal (CICA) in R v
12 Gibson<sup>4</sup>. In the course of his oral submissions, Mr Hill submitted that the 13 Magistrate should have applied the test and directed herself in accordance with the 14 well-known England and Wales authority of R v Galbraith<sup>5</sup>. Rather, it was clear
15 from the way in which she explained her "no case" decision in her verdict
16 judgment that the Magistrate had arrived at findings of fact prematurely, achieving, 17 as Mr Hill put it, complete foreclosure of the balancing exercise that needs to take 18 place only when all the evidence has been called. Returning to the same point later 19 in his argument, Mr Hill put things rather more trenchantly: "What you do at half
20 time conditions what you do for the rest of the case." In any event, Mr Hill says, 21 the Magistrate's conclusion that there was a case to answer was simply wrong, on 22 the evidence, since it was unreasonable in all the circumstances to place reliance
23 upon PC Leslie, given that it stood alone and unsupported by other evidence.

1       21.     Thirdly, complaint is made that the Magistrate failed properly to direct herself as 2             to, or give sufficient weight to, the good character of the Appellants.

4       22.     Fourthly this was not a case, it was urged, in which any adverse inference could
5             properly be drawn from the Appellants' failure to mention in interview the facts
6             upon which they relied at trial.

8       23.     Lastly, it was argued that the Magistrate's verdicts were, on the entirety of the 9             evidence, unreasonable.

10
11     THE FAILURE TO HOLD A VOIR DIRE:

12
13       24.     Several obstacles (and they are insuperable) lie in Mr Hill's path in complaining of 14             the Magistrate's failure to hold a voir dire, not least of which is that the 15             Appellants' attorneys at trial conceded that such a procedure was not necessary 16             (page 5 of the transcript of evidence).

18       25.     In any event the position at trial was that Mr Hurlston denied having said anything
19             at all to PC Leslie at the lot, whilst Mr Watler conceded he may have asked PC
20             Leslie to turn a blind eye. This was simply a disputed issue of the fact for the 21             Magistrate to resolve, not a question of admissibility. If the magistrate could not be 22             sure that the Appellants made a request to turn a blind eye, she would place no
23             reliance upon it. If on the other hand these requests were made, they were, on the 24             evidence, spontaneous and not, on any version of events, in response to any 25             question posed by the officer.

26
27
28

1       26.     A police officer is not required, as Mr Hill suggested, to prohibit a suspect from 2             embarking upon or continuing a spontaneous admission halfway through the 3             caution. I am altogether unable to understand how a police officer's observation -
4             to the effect that he might have been able to take a different course had it been 5             ganja rather than cocaine - can amount to an inducement. Rather, it is a statement 6             that the officer was impervious to such requests, taking the view that the law must 7             take its course. Still further, there is no suggestion from the appellants that they 8             were prompted by anything held out to them to make admissions. It bears repeating
9             that one Appellant denies and the other concedes that he might have made a 10            request to turn a blind eye.

11
12     THE RULING ON THE SUBMISSIONS AT THE CLOSE OF THE PROSECUTION CASE

13
14       27.     As I indicated in the course of argument, as one more familiar with trials in the 15             Grand Court and jury trials in England and Wales, my initial reaction on reading
16             this part of the transcript was one of surprise that the Magistrate had not explicitly 17             directed herself in accordance with the words of Galbraith familiar to all criminal 18             practitioners – in essence whether there was evidence upon which a reasonable
19             tribunal of fact, properly directed, could convict. Instead, the Magistrate directed 20             herself in the following terms whilst citing both s.70 of the Criminal Procedure
21             Code (CPC) (2017 revision) – the revision then in force – and the case of Waldron
22             v R<sup>6</sup>.

23                     “On a no case submission I must decide whether the prosecution has presented
24                     a prima facie case, that is, if there was no other evidence, I would be sure 25                     beyond reasonable doubt of their guilt,”
26
27
28

1       28.     Having considered that section and the case of Waldron with care, it is abundantly
2             clear, not only from what she said, but from her comprehensive review of the 3             evidence that she was loyally following the approach laid down in Waldron, the 4             statute and authority binding upon her. Section 70 of the CPC provided as follows:

5                     "If at the close of the case for the prosecution the Court considers that, subject
6                     to any fresh matter which might be revealed in the conduct of the defence, the 7                     prosecution has established a prima facie case, the court shall, if no defence is 8                     offered, convict the accused, but, if the Court considers that a prima facie case
9                     on the evidence presented has not been established and the accused offers no 10                    defence, or submits there is no case to answer, the court shall acquit the 11                    accused."
12

14
15       29.     In Waldron, the learned Chief Justice undertook a detailed analysis of s.70 and its 16             relationship with Galbraith. In his judgement, approved by the CICA, these 17             observations appear (pages 360 to 361):

18                     "the phrase "a prima facie case" ....means a case which satisfies the court 19                     beyond reasonable doubt that, subject to some fresh matter which might have 20                     been revealed in the conduct of the defence ( if a defence had been offered), the 21                     accused is guilty."
22

23
24
25       Of the phrase "subject to any fresh matter which might be revealed in the conduct 26       of the defence", he said this:

27                     "This expression is a further indication of the provisional nature of a prima 28                     facie case to answer leaving room for the possible exculpatory effect that the 29                     evidence offered by defendant might have. It recognises that, in some 30                     circumstances, the finding of a prima facie case displaces onto a defendant, 31                     not the legal or persuasive but the evidential burden of proof to answer the 32                     prima facie showing of guilt that has appeared from the evidence of the 33                     prosecution."
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41

1 30. Mr Hill invited me to say that Waldron had been wrongly decided, that it “went
2 too far”, asking me to prefer the authority of Gibson. I decline that invitation. I do
3 not take Gibson as laying down any particular principle or authority, neither do I
4 regard it as inconsistent with Waldron, although it does offer guidance to those 5 conducting summary trials that:

6 “In ruling against a no-case submission, a Magistrate should always refrain 7 from expressing his views or commenting on the evidence in a way which could
8 be interpreted as deciding issues of fact or as being prejudicial to the fair 9 consideration of the defence.”
10

11 31. The Magistrate clearly had this danger in mind. Under the heading “final analysis”
12 she said this:

13 “Having now heard all of the evidence, I had to consider whether I could be 14 sure of the defendants’ guilt. This included reconsidering the prosecution 15 evidence afresh, particularly in light of the defendants’ evidence.”
16

17 32. It is plain that the Magistrate was, at the close of the prosecution case, arriving at 18 preliminary views on the evidence that she had by then heard, whilst keeping her 19 mind open to evidence which may be called on behalf of the defence.
20

21 33. I conclude that the Magistrate approached the no case submissions entirely
22 appropriately and in accordance with statute and case law as it then was. That said, 23 the law has since changed. Section 70 of the CPC has been amended by The 24 Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment Law), 2018 order. According to the 25 preamble of the Amendment Law, it was enacted “to amend the Criminal 26 Procedure Code (2017 Revision) to provide for consistency between the 27 procedures in the Summary Court and the Grand Court at the conclusion of the 28 prosecution case.”
29
30
31

1       34.     Section 70, as amended, now provides as follows:

2               “If at the close of the case for the prosecution the Court considers that a prima
3               facie case on the evidence has not been established, the court shall acquit the 4               accused or in any other case, the court shall proceed to hear the case for the 5               accused.”

7       35.     I have considered whether, had this section then been in force, it would have made
8               any difference to the Magistrate’s conclusion. I am sure that it would not. She 9               made clear that the case centred upon the credibility of PC Leslie and whether, at 10              the end of the day, she could be sure that he was a witness of truth. It is then worth
11              recalling the words of Galbraith (“limb 2”):

12              “where however the prosecution evidence is such that its strength or weakness
13              depends on the view to be taken of witnesses’ reliability, or other matters
14              which are generally speaking within the province of the jury and where on one
15              possible view of the fact there is evidence upon which a jury could properly 16              come to the conclusion that the defendant is guilty, then the judge should allow 17              the matter to be tried by the jury.”
18

19       36.     At the close of the prosecution evidence, this case fell squarely within limb 2.

20

21       37.     Before leaving this topic, I should return to the Appellants’ complaint that the 22               Magistrate failed, when announcing her rejection of the no case submissions, to 23               give her reasons there and then. Whilst I have no reason to doubt Mr Hill’s 24               instructions, there is no definitive record of what was or was not said at that stage.
25               Whilst nothing turns on it in this case, the court takes the view, particularly given 26               the recent amendments to s.70, and the expressed desire of the legislature to align 27               more closely the procedures of the Summary Court and the Grand Court, that an 28               explanation of the test being applied and the reasons for upholding or rejecting
29               such a submission should be given when the decision is announced. Fuller reasons 30               can then be given, if appropriate, in the verdict judgment.

31
32
33

1     GOOD CHARACTER AND ADVERSE INFERENCES

3     38.     The Magistrate correctly directed herself as to the weight to be given to the 4             Appellants' good character; that it was a factor to be borne in mind, both when 5             considering the credibility of the appellants' evidence and the likelihood that they
6             would behave in the criminal fashion alleged by the prosecution. In the case of Mr
7             Watler, the direction as to propensity was perhaps more favourable than it should 8             have been, given his guilty pleas. Similarly, the Magistrate directed herself
9             properly as to the inferences to be drawn from their failure in interview to mention
10            the facts upon which they relied at trial. She concluded, as she was entitled to do, 11            that their silence at interview was not because they relied upon legal advice, but 12            because they did not, at that stage, have an explanation for the circumstances in 13            which they were arrested. That said, I note that she felt those inferences were "of 14            little consequence, given the strength of the rest of the evidence."

15
16     39.     I turn to Mr Hill's general submission that the convictions were against the weight
17             of the evidence and are unsafe, since reliance could not properly be placed upon 18             the evidence of PC Leslie. Mr Hill repeated the submissions made in the court
19             below – making a number of points, such as (by way of example only), the absence
20             of scientific or other evidence connecting the appellants with the drugs, the absence
21             of any supporting evidence from searches of the appellants' homes, the possibility 22             that the drugs and drug paraphernalia could have been left on the empty lot, along 23             with the generality of the garbage strewn there, Mr Hurlston's negative drug test.

1       40.     As previously noted, this case depended in very large measure upon the view taken
2             by the Magistrate as to the credibility of PC Leslie. In such cases, the decision of 3             the Privy Council, on appeal from this jurisdiction in R v Crawford<sup>7</sup> gives clear
4             and binding guidance as to how the appellate jurisdiction of the Grand Court and 5             the Court of Appeal should be exercised:

6                     “The Court of Appeal should not have overturned the Grand Court’s decision
7                     solely on the basis that it doubted the credibility of PC Bradley’s evidence. It
8                     should only have done so if it was clearly established, and not merely doubted,
9                     that the trial judge failed to assess the evidence properly. The court should 10                    have recognised, first, that it was at a real disadvantage compared with the 11                    trial judge when assessing the credibility and reliability of witnesses as it
12                    relied on transcripts and did not have the opportunity to see or hear witnesses, 13                    and, secondly, that an appellate court should only disturb the findings of the 14                    trial judge (whether sitting alone or with jury) regarding the credibility of 15                    witnesses in rare cases in which it was certain that the trial judge must have 16                    been mistaken.”

18
19
20       41.     The Magistrate was entitled on all the evidence placed before her to conclude that 21             she was sure that PC Leslie was a witness of truth. She assessed the evidence 22             properly and with conspicuous care, looking for factors in the evidence that 23             provided support for the prosecution and defence cases. Her verdict judgment
24             contains a careful and detailed analysis of the evidence placed before her,
25             explaining the inferences she drew. Her conclusions were, in the judgement of this 26             court, entirely permissible and justified on the whole of the evidence. She was also 27             entitled to conclude that from the quantities of the drugs involved, that there was an 28             intention to supply (as to which, I have borne in mind the case of Waldron, where 29             the question of inferring an intention to supply from quantity alone was dealt with 30             at length). It follows that the appeals against conviction are, in respect of both 31             appellants, dismissed.

Judgment on Appeals against Conviction. SCA 14-16. Watler (Oscar Lee) & Hurlston (Stephen Wayne) v R. Coram: Chapple J. (Actg.). Date: 26.06.19

1     THE APPEALS AGAINST SENTENCE

3     42.     At the outset of this appeal, the leave of the court was sought to adduce further
4             evidence. An affidavit sworn by Mr Watler on 21st February 2019 detailing the 5             medical and other problems he has experienced following a kidney transplant in 6             2008 was submitted.

8     43.     The Magistrate was made aware of Mr Watler's medical history but it was not 9             "suggested that incarceration would be detrimental to his health and therefore 10            provides only minimal mitigation" (sentencing remarks, paragraph 16).

11
12    44.     Mr Watler's affidavit now suggests the opposite: "The medication, the food in the 13            prison and the environment of the prison are damaging to my kidney function... Dr
14            Nelson sent a letter to the prison instructing the prison to be careful to keep me in 15            an infection free environment. However, that is impossible as the prison is 16            crowded and I am in a cell with 4 other inmates."

17
18    45.     Dr Nelson's letter is exhibited to the affidavit as are extracts from Mr Watler's 19             medical records. He explains that he has been admitted to hospital on several 20             occasions since his conviction and concludes in this way: "I am afraid that this 21             prison environment may cause me to lose my only transplanted kidney." Clearly 22             these are matters which the interests of justice and humanity demand should be 23             investigated further. They may have a bearing upon his appeal against sentence. It 24             was for that reason that I gave leave for the affidavit evidence to be admitted.

25
26    46.     As matters presently stand, there is altogether insufficient evidence or information
27             for me to take his appeal against sentence further at this stage. First and foremost, I
28             have no evidence from those charged with Mr Watler's safe custody and wellbeing

1 at HMP Northwood. A court is, as a matter of general principle, entitled to assume 2 that the Prison Service is able to provide the necessary care for all those sentenced 3 by the courts, including those having special needs, whether by reason of medical 4 conditions or otherwise – unless it is informed to the contrary.

6 47. The first step is for the Director of Prisons at HMPS Northwood to be sent copies
7 of Mr Watler's affidavit and exhibits and asked for his comments. Depending 8 upon his response, it may be necessary for further evidence and opinion to be 9 obtained. Even if this court had the resources to conduct these enquiries, it would,
10 I am sure, be wrong as a matter of principle for the court to become involved in 11 those mechanics. It must be a matter for the Respondent to take this further in order
12 to assist the court. I will discuss what needs to be done and give any necessary 13 directions at the conclusion of this judgment.

15 48. I have given leave for the affidavit to be admitted as a whole since it would be 16 artificial to do otherwise. However it also seeks to rely upon Mr Watler's medical 17 condition to provide additional grounds of appeal against conviction.

18
19 49. Mr Watler now avers that he wanted to plead guilty to possession of all the cocaine 20 charged in this case, defending the allegations of having an intent to supply on the 21 basis that all the cocaine was for his personal use, to alleviate the deep depression 22 he suffers as a result of the "kidney rejection medications" he is obliged to take, the 23 difficulty he has sleeping and the anxiety he feels about his condition.

24
25 50. Had this new evidence appeared in a separate affidavit, I would have refused to 26 admit it, on general principles. This material was available at the trial. Mr Watler, 27 made a decision as to the basis upon which he sought to defend the allegations 28 made against him. He cannot now properly seek to overturn his convictions by arguing that there was another defence (wholly inconsistent with the evidence he gave on oath at trial to the effect that he had never knowingly consumed cocaine) which he now thinks might have had a better chance of success. Mr Hill sought to argue that 1.6 lbs of cocaine could reasonably be for the personal use of an addict – an argument with scant prospect of success, in the opinion of this court.

51. For the reasons given above, Mr Watler's appeal against sentence is adjourned. It makes obvious sense for Mr Hurlstone's appeal against sentence to be heard with that of his co-appellant.

52. I will now hear argument as to the way forward and the evidence required to resume these appeals.
